U.S. Criticizes Marcos But Will Not Slash Aid

By Richard Burt

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6 (NYT).—The State Department, in a report prepared for Congress, has criticized the government of Bresident Ferdinand Marcos in the Philippines for the use of torare and "severe instrusions on individual rights." Despite this, government officiale said that the Carter administration plans to maintain existing levels of military sid to the Philippines next year. According to officials, the administration's military assistance mest for the 1979 fiscal year contains a request for $36.6 million in arms aid and credits for the Philippines, the name level approved by Congress last year. This figure could grow significantly if the administration succeeds this year in concluding a new base rights agreement with the Philippines this year. U.S. of-ficials estimate that the agree-ment could provide the Marcon government with more than $100 million in long-term military as-

Some officials privately argue that the credibility of the administration's human nights program might be jeopardized by main-taining existing levels of aid to the Philippines and other nations accused by the State Department of violating personal and political

The State Department's report is part of an assessment of 105 nations that receive some form of U.S. military or economic assistance which will be released by Congress this week. The report, a copy of which was obtained by The New York Times, says the martial law instituted in 1972 by Mr. Marcos has "resulted in the suspension of democratic forms of government and in the severe crutaikment of human rights of individual nitizens."

Terture Declined'

While noting that the govern-ment's use of torture against political enemies of the Marcos administration appears to have "declined in frequency," the report accuses the government of continuing to use torture, em-ploying "such methods as water treatment, electric shock, long isolation and physical heating."

It says fast President Marcos has taken steps this year to cur-tail the powers of military courts, sed several political prisoners and announced a parliamentary election for this year. "But no real steps have yet been taken toward the restoration of democratic government or the elimination of the more severe intrusions on individual rights," it adds.

The human rights assessments are required under a 1976 law mandating that human rights violations be considered in allocating U.S. military assistance. In briefings for Congress on the administration's 1979 assistence request, officials are said to have stressed that the $4.1-billion package of aid and credits contains no increases for nations judged to be human rights violators.

Represents Cut Swiet bloc and in black African Government officials are also said to have told congressional statif sides that the request represents a $500-million cut in last year's total of military assistance and that this reflects President Carter's policy of exercising overall restraint on arms transfers. However, officials acknowledge that the $4.1-billion figure does not include additional funds the administration might seek in supplemental requests if new defense cooperation agreements with the Philippines, Greece and Turkey are completed and approved this

As a result, congressional aides think it likely the administration's overall request for the 1979 fiscal year will rise above this year's total of $4.5 billion. Although the request provides for no increases in grant aid, sales credit or military training funds

French Parties Seen Waging Rigid Ideological Campaign

By Jonathan Kandell

PARIS Feb. 6 (NYT).—The legislative election campaign under way in France is pitting leftists and rightists against each other along rigid ideological lines rarely seen in Western Europe in recent years. The Socialists and Communists are still battling each other for the leadership of the left. The right is hardly more united, with Jacques Chirac and his neo-Gauliists critical of President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and his coalition of small centrist parties. But there are few doubts that the Left wins, as it is still favored to do, on the two-round elections on March 12 and 19, an attempt will be made to change radically the social and economic structure of the country. Constitutional Crisis A leftist government, with Sociolist leader Francois Mitterrand as its likely prime minister, could also set the stage for a constitutional crisis because Mr. Giscard d'Estaing has vowed to remain in office until his term expires in 1981 despite his opposition to leftist aims. The left, which squandered a huge lead when the Communists and Socialists split over platform differences in September, has shown more strength at the polls than the center-right coalition government. This is partly because of the unpopularity of the government's austerity measures, fears over unemployment and complaints about the high cost of living. The government has not been able to provide a united front, as Mr. Giscard d'Estaing had hoped, to contrast with leftist disarray.

An additional factor is the youth vote. For the first time in national legislative elections, 18year-olds will be able to vote. Most analysts expect them to lean toward the left, particularly because unemployment is highest among teenagers.

New Hopes

The Communists also have in recent weeks allowed leftists to rekindle hopes that they will join the Socialists in a coalition government. Although the Communists continue to attack bitterly the Socialists and have not yet agreed to back them on the crucial second election round, the Communist leadership has said that it will insist on at least onethird of the cabinet costs if the left wins.

The left has come close to winning in several nest elections. The government is hoping to scare middle-class, Socialist-minded voters away from supporting the left, and the financial uncertainties that have sharply dropped the value of the franc in recent days are creating a jittery at-

Sadat Accuses Israel Of Obstructing Talks

By Fred Farris

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6 (IHT). President Anwar Sadat, declaring Egypt's continuing commitment to "the cause of peace" in the Middle East, today strongly criticized Israel for foot-dragging in direct negotiations between the

"The Israeli position is hardening rather than softening as we go along," Mr. Sadat told the National Press Club in a televised luncheon speech. He said that it was up to Israel to make the next move in the stalled talks. He said the proposed Israeli solution for the key issues of the West Bank and Gaza "is based on continuation of occupation" by Israeli troops and this, he said, was unacceptable.

He particularly denounced the establishment by the government of Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin of "illegal settle-ments" in the Sinai and the Sinai and the West Bank.

"We were told that the Israeli government would rather resign than compromise on the illegal settlements that were built on Arab land in defiance" of world opinion, Mr. Sadat said, referring to the negotiations with Israel.

"We are told that the Arabs-Christians and Moslems alike-• Israelis welcome resumption

Mr. Sadat said that the negotiating process requires compro-mises by both sides and added: "I would like to make it crystal clear that we remain committed to the cause of peace and deter-mined to give it every possible chance."

"I am willing to give the experiment every possible chance, until I reach the conclusion that enough time has elapsed without achieving any tangible progress," Mr. Sadat said.

Concessions Sought The Evyptian leader did not say what he might do if Israel did not make the concessions he seeks, among them creation of a Palestinian state, making Jerusalem an "open city" and removing Israeli settlements in Arab territory occupied by Israel since the 1967 war.

However, he did call on the United States—government and people—to put pressure on Israel to compromise, noting that Israel

Reports from Africa and Washington said the Ethiopians are using cluster bombs, air-to-ground missiles and napalm in their battle against Somalia end Eritrean rebels.

The Soviet Union is also backing Ethiopia. Somalia is backed by Egypt and other Arab states. President Sadat said that he had ceived urgent messages from Somalia and Chad on his arrival in Washington last week.

Observers had been intrigued by the implication that in supporting Ethiopia, Israel was aligning tiself with the Soviet Union, China, Cuba and Vietnam. It appears that Israel may be considering the Soviet influence in Ethiopia as temporary as Moscow's ties with

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.-Hippopulates, father of medicine, first described its symptoms during an epidemic in the Athenian army Frankfurt police spokesman Rans Neitzel said that machine in 412 BC. Fifteenth-century Romans linked it to the influence in West Germany after the fain jet. Soviet-built Tupolev-built of Czechoslovakia's state-band CSA airline landed have an Epot of the stars and the Latin name "influenza" stuck in most of the Western world.

Modern doctors know a great deal about flu now, even the ballistics of the sneeze that usually spreads it-musale velocity, about 103 miles an hour; range, up to 12 feet; density, up to 85 million viruses to the sneeze, on the average.

As the Spanish, Aslan, Hong Kong, Victoria, Texas and now Russian strains testify, however, medicine still cannot stop this "last great plague of man," as an authority termed it.

During the last 250 years, there cave been at least 10 influenza "pandemics" or major international epidemics and 20 lesser ones. The flu attack that began in the spring of 1918 and continued for about 15 months was among the most devastating illa period of several years.

Origins Unemplained And there is still no satisfac-tory explanation of the origin of new strains of the virus that totally defy previous vaccines and make influenza pandemics a continuing fact of human life. But as scientists learn more about the sea-urchin-like flu virus about four millionths of an inch in diameter, each with two kinds of spikes protruding from its spherical body-they have come increasingly to suspect that an enormous, natural, emparently ineracticable reservoir of the viruses exists in domestic animals and migratory birds. The popular theory today is that these animal flu vicuses, either directly or after hybridization with human flu, can be blamed for the great pandemics.

strand of ribonucleic acid (RNA),

Mutations can make the viruses slightly different or, sometimes, radically different, from previous viruses. If the new flu virus is only slightly differentresulting from so-called genetic nizing it from its encestors. If the new virus is radically different-a genetic "shift"-then the body totally fails to recognize the invaders until after infection

Double Protection

Now prevalent in the United States, for example, is the Texas strain (so named because it was first identified in Texas). Earlier, a Victoria strain was prevalent and vaccine was made to fight it. This Victoria vaccine gives protection against Texas flu (as does a previous infection with flu) because Victoria. characteristics of both strains are quite similar. Only genetic "drift" had occurred.

In the same way, the Russian strain now gathering momentum in the United States is similar to the flu strain prevalent in the early 1950s. This means, ex-first to persons under 24 who have medical disabilities, according to last week's recommendstions by the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Normally, persons over 65 are most susceptible to a new flu type and have first priority. In the case of genetic "shifts," which cause pandemics, no previcus exposure or previous vaccine gives any protection because the new virus's characteristics are totally different from those of previous viruses.

Old Antibodies

People born before 1990, and thus exposed to flu viruses then prevalent, were found to have significant amounts of antibodies against the 1957 Asian flu. And people born between 1890 and 1900 had antibody protection against the 1968 Hong Kong Ilu,

This pattern, and other evidence, suggested to some scientists that there is a 50-to-60-year cycle in recurrence of gandemic flu strains. During the years, it is held, the virus undergoes many small changes until it suddeply blossoms with characteristics totally unlike those of its predecessors. Many arguments have been made against this theory, however. Most recently the Russian flu should have held off until about 2000, according to the theory, because that strain was last observed in the United States in the early 1950s. This cyclical theory led to acute anxiety, nonetheless, when a Fort Dix, N.J., soldier died in 1976 from a flu strain found in pigs. The 1918-19 pandemic is generally believed to have started with a swine flu that infected Army recruits in Fort Riley, Kan., in March, 1918, and then spread around the world

Rhodesian Censorship Toughest on Locals

By John F. Burns

SALISBURY, Feb. 6 (NYT) .--You must let me introduce you to my new editor," a British reporter said, provoking chuckles from his drinking companions at the Quill Club, a gathering place for newsmen in the Rhodesian capital. "He's no Hemingway, but his khaki shorts are splendidly starched."

Black humor is the club's stockin-trade. For nearly a month, reporters covering the war between Rhodesian government forces and black nationalist guerrillas have been required by law to submit all accounts of military activity for clearance by the Ministry of Combined Operations.

For the first five years of the war, the only restraint was a requirement that reporters accompanying military units on operations submit their dispatches for clearance. The new regulations, approved after strong pressure from the armed forces, extend the requirement to any report touching on security.

The restrictions, set out in a decree published under the Emergency Powers Act, carry a maximum penalty of a $1,550 fine and 12 months in fail.

New 'Stresses

Officials have attributed the tightening of the system to the new "stresses" on the country caused by an intensification in guerrilla operations and a sharply rising casualty list. But they have conceded that a furor last year involving an American photographer's allegations against the armed forces was a factor in the

The photographer, J. Ross Bauchman, who was working for the Associated Press, said he had witnessed brutal treatment of suspected guerrillas by Rhodesian soldiers during a mission. Baughman, who produced photographs to support his allegations, left the country before his story broke.

He has been promised immunity from prosecution if he returns to testify at a military inquiry into the charges. But the incident has embarrassed the government, which consistently denies black nationalist charges of torture and brutality.

Under the new arrangements, reporters deliver their articles to the Milton Building, an imposing edifice in the center of the capital that serves as military headquarters. While they wait, the censors—some of them civilians doing reserve duty and others professional military men-take their copy away for scrutiny.

The extent of the censorship varies widely. In the first days under the new regulations, officers were removing whole passages from stories, and occasionally rejecting them entirely. But etings between reporters and officials appear to have placed limits on the blue-penciling, at least for foreign reporters,

One New York Times report submitted earlier this week was returned without a single change. Even the word "guerrillas" was left untouched, despite the censors' expressed preference for the word "terrorists." Unofficial figures on the war's mounting death toll, another sensitive issue, were also approved.

The process is not always so benign. A piece submitted by one correspondent about a recent upsurge in guerrilla activity in the Salisbury area was returned with

Rhodesia Bid Is Rebuffed

(Continued from Page 1) there probably would not be an official reaction to the British-U.S. document. "Were leaving it to the black nationalists Rhodesial to turn it down. At any rate, its a non-starter." a government source said.

Josiah Chinamano, who attended the Malta talks as an aide to the co-leader of the Patriolic Front, Joshua Nkomo, told a news conference that the talks achieved greater agreement than previously reported.

He said the British government accepted the idea of a governing council whiel the Front agreed to United Nations involvement during a transition period.

Mr. Chinamano said the Malta talks were cordial and had made sufficient progress to justify 15other similar meeting soon.

In Lusaka, Zambia, Mr. Nkomo said today that the composition of the council, proposed in the British-U.S. document, was not decided. But he said that the Patriotic Front expected a major role and the internally based black leaders now negotiating with Prime Minister Ian Smith would not be represented

Concerns Not Political

The piece that was censored was about local reaction to the army's new "safe return" policy for guerrillas. Under this policy pamphlets have been dropped in war zones promising that guerrillas turning themselves in will not be hanged. When the general removed criticism of the policy from the article, the editor decided not publish it.

Officials who have discussed the restrictions with reporters insist that they were introduced to protect military operations against harmful disclosures, such as details of tactics or sources of sup-

Reporters have been assured that the censors' concerns are military, not political, but in practice the distinction becomes blurred. For example, a provision allowing the censors to remove anything that might adversely "affect the morale' 'of the gov-ernment forces could be interpreted to bar reports that present the guerrillas as a growing threat to stability.

Officials have asked reporters "try to work as a team" with the censors and recognize that the restrictions are necessary. "These regulations are anathema to me," e high-ranking government official told reporters. "But at times of stress it is necessary, alas, to do these things."

Among local journalists, there is agreement that certain restrictions are necessary. "I'm a Rhodesign, so I accept that in a time of war the country's interests must come first," one editor said. "But I still believe in the old adage 'Know thine enemy.' If our enemy can't even be named can

At least 22 policemen were injured as protesters inside the concrete and steel fortress threw firebombs, large rocks, and heavy iron bolts at them.

The airport, located in Narita 50 miles from Tokyo, is scheduled to open March 30. It has been the frequent target of bitter armed protests by farmers, who object to having their land taken for runways, and radical students opposed to the national government.

Long Protest

The protesters have vowed to continue the opposition even after the airport is opened, and a leader has talked of attacking the control tower. The opponents have become a major embarrassment to the Japanese government, which had hoped to open the airport in 1973 as a modern gateway to Asia.

By midnight, the police had not succeeded in hauling down the tower because the muddy field would not give traction for a large truck bearing a heavy crane. Meanwhile, at least four stu-

The administration's aid request contains no credits for Brezil or Argenting because these two countries ended their military assistance agreements with Washington last year after the State Department criticized their human rights performance.

Existing Commitments

In contrast to Latin American states, the administration, for geopolitical reasons, has decided to maintain existing commitments to recipients elsewhere. In the Philipines case, U.S. bases at Subic Bay and Clark Air Field are viewed by officials as vital to maintaining the future U.S. military presence in East Asia, particularly after the withdrawal of U.S. Army ground forces from South Kores.

In addition to the $36.6 million for the Philippines, the admin-istration is also asking for $275 million in sales credits for South Korea in fiscal 1979.

In the case of South Korea however, the State Department's human rights report notes some improvement during the last year. While noting that torture "cannot be ruled out in isolated cases," the State Department says it does not believe it is now regularly employed by the South Korean gov-

The report also says political prisoners in South Korean jails are receiving better treatment and that several have been granted paroles. While it notes that South Korean measures curbing political activity have been relaxed, the report says restrictions still violate international standards.

What is new about the nationalization program is its aim of bringing a substantial part of manufacturing under state control. The left has vowed to nationalize nine large private manufacturing groups and about 400 of their fully owned subsidisries, all of which account for 8 per cent of the industrial labor force of 650,000 persons.

1.4 million workers are employed in state industries, but in terms of sales turnover only 7 per cent of manufacturing industry is in state hands.

In West Germany, the Social Democrats are committed to an anti-inflationary program—at the risk of continued slow growth and unemployment—that is not much different from what could be expected under the Christian Democrats. In Sweden, the first center-right government in almost half a century has done little to built by the Social Democrats.

And in Portugal, where there was a leftist military revolution four year ago, the governing Socialists have formed a coalition with a conservative party.
Only in France is the feeling widespread that, if a new government emerges, it will reset the country's course on such matters as the ownership of industry. the distribution of wealth, the relationship between labor and management and other fundamental issues. Elsewhere in Western Europe the ideal of state ownership of industry has waned because nationalized companies have often proved inefficient, overstaffed and a financial drain. But state control over production continues to be a central tenet of French Socialists and Communists, who view private capital and ownership as basically wasteful and exploitative of the working class. 'Audacions Redistribution'

"Swedish social democracy accomplished an audacious and intelligent redistribution by social and fiscal means," said Mr. Mit-terrand. "But I think that the Swedes were wrong to neglect to take over the great centers f production and credit. The French left is not advocat-

Hundreds of firms were taken over by the first Gaullist government after Worki War II. partly because of widespread bankruptcy and partly because many of their owners were accused of collaboration with the Nazis

The left has made it clear that companies, both private and state-owned, must show far more workers. Both Communists and Socialists have promised to increase the minimum monthly wage from $370 to $510, or 35 per cent, and to give steep raises to other low-paid workers. They would also grant an additional week's paid vacation, lower the ent age to between 55 and 60 and increase family allowances. The left has promised to achieve immediate invisids against the more than a million unemployed by making it more difficult for private concerns to discharge workers and by forcing state companies to take on more em-

Flu Virus: Its 'Simple' Nature Makes It a Formidable Enemy

At least two other theories concerning pandemics have been pro-posed, and these are based on the existence of an extensive animal ervoir of flu viruses. These two ideas, as formulated in a scientific American magazine article by Martin Kaplan, who recently retired from the World Health Organization, and Dr. Robert Webster of St. Jude Children's Research Hospital in Meniphis, are that:

"A human influence virus

recombines [genetically mixes] with an influenza virus from lower animais and acquires a completely new [characteristic] while retaining the capacity to cause disease in man. · "An influenza virus of lower animals is transmitted to man and acquires the capacity to cause disease in man , ."

Flu undoubtedly afflicts animals, from pigs, horses and calves to dogs, chickens, turkeys, even bears. And the evidence with swine, in particular, is that human ilu virus can infect pigs and pig flu virus can infect

A flu virus from horses has been found in Miami thoroughbreds and in an isolated horse herd in Mongolia. "A possible explanation is that it was carried by migratory birds," the two researchers wrote.

Mr. Kapian and Dr. Webster conclude that the best case can be made for the theory of recombinations between human and animal viruses, although they admit it is circumstantial. But, if either of these animal-based theories is correct, it probably means that flu will always plague mankind,

Retired U.S. Officers Criticize Brown's Efforts

Civilian Control of Defense Spending Assailed

By Bernard Weinraub

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6 (NYT) .-Defense Secretary Harold Brown's efforts to cement civilian control over the Pentagon budget and place tighter restrictions on decision-making by the armed forces has been strongly criticized by two prominent retired officers, Adm. Thomas Moorer, a former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Gen. Richard Stilwell, former commander of U.S. forces in Korea.

The comments, made in sepa rate letters to Rep. Richard White D-Texas a member of the House Armed Services Committee, are considered the start of an expected wave of criticism in the next few months by the military because of Mr. Brown's plans to restore tighter civilian control over armed forces spending and Adm. What concerns numerous milltary officers, retired as well as those on active duty, is a series of directives by Mr. Brown late last year that ordered major changes in the budget system. Es-sentially, the military was told that Mr. Brown, his civilian staff as well as President Carter would involve themselves in the budget process at least nine months earlier than the current system, enabling the civilians to consider military requests in detail and to weigh carefully decisions on specific programs and weapons.

Mr. Brown's efforts are the most elaborate since the days of former Defense Secretary Robert McNamara, and military officials have privately expressed concern that Mr. Brown was moving to

Probers Say Volunteer Force Cost $18 Billion Over Draft

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6 (UPI) .-Congressional investigators said today the all-volunteer military has cost $18.4 billion more than the draft system it replaced, but a Pentagon official said that estimate is at least $3.7 billion too

Elmer Staats, director of the congressional General Accounting Office, said the increased costs -calculated from 1971 when the switch began—were due to the price of-recruiting and to military improvements such as higher pay, bonuses and better housing.

But John White, assistant deiense secretary for manpower, said the GAO estimate included a 1971 pay raise for junior per-sonnel—which would have been given if the draft had remained. For that and other reasons, he told a Senate Armed Services sub-committee, the GAO estimate is at least $3.7 billion higher than the Pentagon's calculations

Mr. White said, however, that the Defense Department is looking at alternatives to the current system, to see where money can

He did not elaborate, and gave no indication that the Pentagon wants to return to the draft. While there has been discussion of that possibility, the administration's position is that costs can be reduced in other ways and it is not necessary to reinstate compulsory military service, which ended completely in December,

By Adam Clymer WASHINGTON, Feb. 6 (NYT).

-The Republican National Committee plans to spend $1.75 million this year in an extraordinary effort to elect state legislators across the country. No major party has ever done this before, and the Democrats have no comparable plans.
Bill Brock, Republican national chairman, called the drive "the top priority of the committee" in 1978, and said it had two pur-poses—to thwart Democratic gerrymandering after the 1980 census and to rebuild the candidate base of the Republican party.

Only 2,403 of the country's 7,556

state legislators are Republicans, and the party now controls both houses in just four states. Moreover, in those four states, the governors are Democrats.

In contrast, the Democrats controi both houses in 35 states. In 27, they also have the governor-ship. So if the situation remained unchanged, the Democrats would have a free hand in redistricting and reapportioning those states after 1980.

But Mr. Brock stressed equally th importance of "bringing in new faces" by fielding more candidates and winning more legislative seats. He said that, even at the cost of possible "shortterm gains" the money might have brought in congressional and gubernatorial races, the statehouse drive was necessary to reverse a loss of more than 800 seats

MOSCOW, Feb. 6 (UPI) .-- The Soviet Progress-1 robot capsule, emptied of valuable supplies and filled with garbage, today was fired away from the orbiting Salyut-6 space station and sent spinning toward destruction in

The Soviet news agency Tass said that Progress-1 separated from the space station this morning. The cosmonauts Lt. Col. Yuri Romanenko and Georgi Grechko, had previously removed from Progress-1 its fresh supplies of oxygen regenerators, food. water, air filters, space suits and clothing, and jet and rocket fuel, and packed their space lab garbage inside. Tass said that, following a of tests on automatic flight control, the Progress-1 capsule would be braked and fall into the upper reaches of the earth's atmosphere, where it would burn up.

Progress-1 was the first such robot supply capsule to dock with an orbiting space station, and the success of its 17-day mission proved the feasibility of Soviet plans to man continuously the Salyut station for as long as

Hollywood Film Executive Quits In Furor on Alleged Check Misuse

NEW YORK, Feb. 6 (Reuters).—David Begelman, who has been at the center of a Hollywood financial scandal, resigned today as president of the motion picture and television division of Columbia Picture Industries Inc., the company announced Mr. Begelman, 56, was recently reinstated as head of the studio after being suspended for 10 weeks for alleged mis-appropriation of $61,000. He admitted caching for his personal use a check for $10,000 made out to film star Cliff Robertson.

The Columbia board of directors said in the statement that it had accepted Mr. Begelman's resignation because rumors and speculation about his conduct continued to appear in the press even though he had made full restitution of the money he allegedly mishandled.

Use of Contraception Is Lagging

Big Abortion Reliance Stirs Japan Concern

By Andrew H Malcolm

TOKYO, Feb. 6 (NYT) -- Last month Dr Shiro Sugiyama delivered 40 bables in his modern medical clinic here. During the same period, he performed 80 abortions. The two figures, which are not startling in Japan, illustrate a facet of health care here that is little known overseas. At a time when an emotional abortion controversy rages in the United States, Japan is marking the 30th anniversary of its liberal abortion

A result is that abortions have become an accepted, integral part of Japan's birth-control efforts, so much so that many married women have had two or three abortions while other women may have had 10 or more. "In terms of our long abortion experience and technique," said Dr. Sugiyama, who agreed to an interview to help promote discussion of the issue, "Japan is a developed country and the United States is still a developing coun-

But the widespread reliance on sbortions is of growing concern among medical experts, including Dr. Sugiyama, not least because of the lowered value it seems to place on human life and the overall ignorance of modern contraceptive methods that it reveals The law's advantages, as cited in a series of interviews with officials, administrators, doctors and patients, are still viewed as outweighing the negative factors in terms of providing total qualified medical care and holding Japan's annual population growth

In 1976, the last year for which figures are available, Japan regstered 1,832,617 live births and 664.106 abortions. But health ex-perts agree that for bureaucratic and tax reasons probably only half the actual abortions are officially reported.

These developments are a result ot a combination of historical, cultural legal and administrative factors in this tradition-bound island nation of 113 million persons. These factors include a lack of religious restraints against abortion, general prohibition against use of birth-control pills and, at least during the early postwar to curb family growth.

Over the centuries, economic concerns have been a powerful social deterrent to large families. During the country's feudal eral which lasted until 1868, the Japanese, especially in the poorer countryside, practiced infanticide—called *mabil*ci, literally "thinning out"—as a kind of ex-postfacto birth control. But under military governments in this century, birth control and especially abortion were banned in the interests of producing soldiers. In the social chaos of a devastated Japan after its surrender in 1945, the shortage of jobs and food again combined to inhibit family growth severely. As a reflection of this need, the eugenic protection law of 1948 permitted abortions under greatly broadened criteria. These included rape. mental illness, hereditary disease and leprosy. Most important, the law permits abortion through the 24th week of pregnancy for "a mother whose health may be atfected seriously by the contin tion of pregnancy or by deliverfrom the physical or economic viewpoint."

The most frequent reason for abortions, doctors report, is the existence of two or three children already, a reason not recognize by the Health and Welfare Min. istry but one that most declors accept under a broader definition of the mother's health. Of the abortions reported, 99.7 per cent are in this category.

Dr. Sugiyams, one of 12,900 Jab. anese doctors licensed to perform abortions, says about 40 per cent of his abortion patients rely on it as their major form of birth

The suit was brought agninst Dr. Larry McDonald, a urnlogist who is also a member of the John Birch Society and a Democratic congressman from Georgia. It was brought by the family of an Alabama man who died in 1974 of 'ung cancer.

The patient, John Scott. had refused the chemotherapy recommended by his Alabama doctor for advanced cancer, a conventional approach. He had been treated by Dr. McDonald with laetrile beginning in 1973, and the family, who originally encouraged the treatment, now contends that it constituted a "worthless quack nedy" and that Dr. McDonald was culpably negligent in not advising a conventional treatment that has proved to have beneficial

Beyond the medical issues i the suit here, the trial has political overtones, both because of Dr. McDonald's membership in con gress and his affiliation with the rightist John Birch Society.

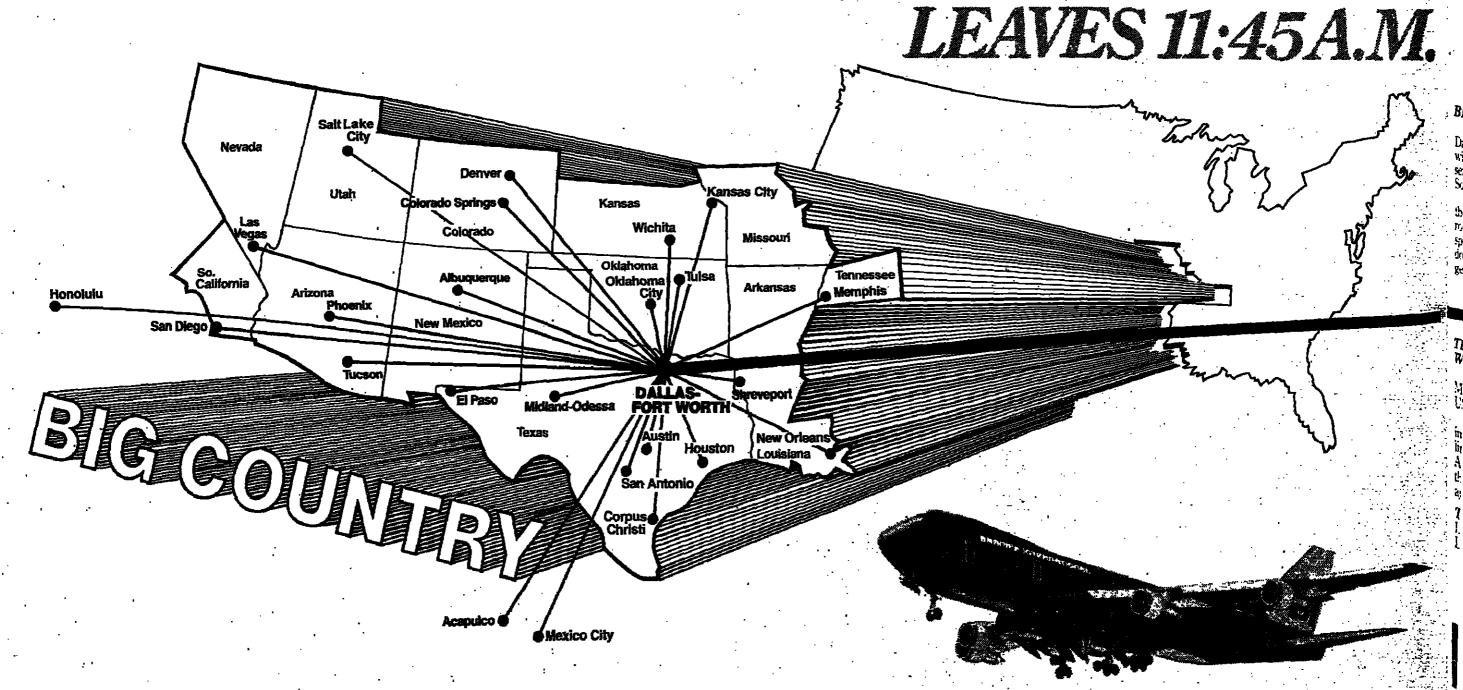

The society has been a leading proponent of the drug, and Dr. McDonald has been listed as its "legislative representative" in literature of the committee for Preedom of Choice in Cancer Therapy Inc. Opposition Chief Well Ahead In Costa Rica President Vote

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica, Feb. 6 (AP:,-Opposition Leader Rodrigo Carazo today held what political analysts said was an unbeatable lead in Costa Rica's presidential

Mr. Carazo, while acknowledging he was ahead, did not claim victory at a news conference early today. "The greatest respect for the institution of suffrage is to not anticipate the results," he said.

The federal election tribunal has not yet declared a winner. With returns from 2,271 of the nation's 5,097 polling stations counted, the Unity Coalition candidate had 51.34 per cent of the popular votes cast in yester-day's election. Luis Alberto Monge of the ruling National Liberation party, which has held the presidency since 1970, polled 43.16 per cent of the votes counted. Six other candidates accounted for the rest of the

to resume this evening. Announcement of the winner was expected early tomorrow when the tally is completed.

Mr. Carazo promised "absolute humility in triumph" and said that "our government will be one of efficiency, order and, above all, goodwill."

About 840,000 of the more than 1 million eligible Costa Rica voters were believed to have cast ballots for a successor to President Daniel Oduber, who was barred by the Constitution from succeeding himself. The Central American country has one of the few democratic Latin American

Nicaraguans Bar Vote in Protest Against Somoza

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, Feb. 6 (AP).—Voters boycotted municipal elections across Nicaragua in protest against President Anastasio Somoza's dictatorship.

Many polling stations were nearly deserted during the voting hours yesterday. "No one is voting," said an anti-Somoza member of the election board in a northern village. "It's this way all over the country."

Somoza's opponents had said the voter turnout rather than the results would indicate what support the Somoza family's 41-year-old hold on the country retains after nearly a month of demonstrations and a general strike protesting the assassination of one of his leading critics, newspaper publisher Pedro Joaquin

Leaders of the nationwide strike by business and labor say 80 per cent of all enterprises have been closed, and 14 people have been killed in guerrilla attacks in the last five days. The only legal opposition group, the Conservative party, said 52 of its 132 candidates had withdrawn in protest against Mr. Somoza. The election was held to pick mayors, city clerks and treasurers in all municipalities but Managua, which is adminis-tered by the federal government.

Jaworski Assails State Dept. Over South Korean Ex-Envoy

By Robert L. Jackson

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6 .- Leon Jaworski has attacked the State Department for failing to insist that South Korea return its former ambassador for questioning in the South Korean influence-buying investigation. Mr. Jaworski, special counsel to the House Ethics Committee, said yesterday that the department had shown "unsound reasoning" in backing South Korea's argument that former ambassador Dong Jo Kim was protected by diplomatic immunity. "I am unbappy over the attitude of the State Department, Mr. Jaworski said in a television interview." What we need is affirmative help from them and not negative suggestions." He said President Carter should overrule the department and personally urge the return of Mr. Kim who is accused of having distributed envelopes of $100 bills on Capitol Hill in 1972 and 1973. Responding to questions about the 10-month-old congressional investigation, the former Watergate prosecutor said about 24 congressmen may have violated ethical standards in accepting money or gratuitles from South Korean agents. Other congressmen may even have lied under cath, he said, but he declined to names

eerle packet of nuclear radiation, awakened the world to the dangers of a skyful of satellites, so the Ronald Bumphrey-David Truong espionage case has brought a new consciousness of the explosive potentials of the relations between the international congeries clustered on the banks of Turtle Bay in New York City and its host, the U.S. government. The recall of Vietnam's chief delegate, Dinh Ba Thi, was ordered by Washington. Mr. Thi refused, but Hanol ordered him to return. So confrontation has been narrowly averted-but the basic problem remains.

The United States recognized that it might have unwelcome visitors at the United Nations, virtually from the start. In fact, the cold war could be said to have had its public beginnings in the squabbles between the Soviet Union and the West at San Francisco, when the UN was created. And in 1947 an agreement was reached between the United States and the world organization which permitted the expulsion of UN delegates and personnel who abused their diplomatic privileges. Several in this category, on the lower levels of rank, have indeed been expelled, without much fuss.

But Mr. Thi headed his delegation and resisted Washington's order to leave the country. This could have precipitated a number of nasty dilemmas. How does one eject

Just as the descent of Cosmos-954, with its a diplomat from an area which is, by international law, his own nation's soil? What would be the effect on attempts to patch up relations with Hanoi? And, most important, what would be the impact on the UN. as an institution, and one in which a large number of Communist and Third World states enjoy flailing the United States, at least with rhetoric?

> Given these possibilities, it is rather surprising that the United States took a grandjury statement, linking Mr. Thi to the alleged spies as an unindicted co-conspirator, as its basis for action. The grand jury is not, as Mr. Thi implies, merely a tool in government hands. It is part of an open and quite fair judicial system-but it is only the first stage of that system. When the passage of secret documents to Vietnam was discovered, and Mr. Thi seemed involved, there could have been little danger in allowing him to remain during the full trial.

Fortunately Hanoi, whether because it feared further exposure, wanted to maintain progress toward better relations with the United States, or simply believed that Washington had the power to determine whether diplomats were abusing their privileges, called Mr. Thi home. But the repercussions, both in court and in the UN, will go on. All parties concerned must give fresh consideration to the relative status of host and guests at Turtle Bay.

The Huge U.S. Trade Deficit

billion-four times the previous record, set in 1972. What does the Carter administration propose to do about it? For the present, not much-and that's quite right. There's been an astounding change in the world's attitudes toward money and trade since the beginning of this decade. The emergence of that earlier, much smaller trade deficit was one of the pressures that impelled the Nixon administration in 1971 into a series of radical remedies-the wage and price freeze, the illegal surtax on imports, the forced devaluation of the dollar. The results of that strategy would hardly invite any president to repeat it today. But the question doesn't even arise, because the world's monetary system has been transformed since 1971.

In those days—it seems a very long time ago-governments fixed their currency exchange rates deliberately, as acts of policy. Today the rates float, which is to say that they rise and fall mainly with the demands of the international money markets. To be sure, governments fiddle with the rates and try, with varying degrees of success, to influence them. But in the last analysis no country, not even the United States, can fully control the rates at which its money is traded around the world

Now back to the buge U.S. trade deficit: All the best people, including Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal, agree that it is unsustainable. But the main reasons for this deficit—frage U.S. oil imports and slack growth of foreign economies that take U.S. exports-are not likely to change easily or soon. How does the administration reconcile

There are two possibilities. One is to slow down the economy so that Americans buy less abroad—especially oil. That means high unemployment and all the other unhappy social effects of stagnation. The alternative

The U.S. trade deficit last year was $26.7 is to keep the U.S. economy growing steadily and let the exchange rates take the strain. That means letting the dollar continue to depreciate against the currencies of countries running surpluses—most notably Japan and West Germany. U.S. policy is to do just that. Mr. Carter's annual economic message two weeks ago made his choice rather clear; the subsequent report of his Council of Economic Advisers makes it altogether explicit.

> The Japanese and the Europeans have received the message with dismay. A declining U.S. dollar means that U.S. exports will be more competitive in their markets, while their exports are less competitive here. The West Germans in particular accuse the United States of trying to force its friends to help carry the costs of its tremendous, and growing, oil imports. That is, in a sense, correct. But it is also correct that any sudden and drastic cut in U.S. oil consumption would push the country into a recession aggravating all the present economic troubles in Europe as well as here. What the Europeans would like is a strenuous and sustained U.S. effort to support the exchange rate by buying dollars heavily. That is, in fact, what the government began doing just before Christmas to break the latest slide. But it's a prohibitively expensive game to play continuously.

> There's always the sinister possibility that the trade deficit will become, as you might say, self-correcting. It exerts a drag on the economy. If the growth rate falls, industrial production will decline and imports will accompany it downward. It is clearly better to suffer big trade deficits for the present and to let the dollar depreciate if necessaryeven though the process promises to create recurring tensions between the United States and its allies.

Rhodesia: The Big 'Ifs'

If agreement is reached [in the Salisbury talks between Ian Smith's government and the black moderate leaders), if the whites accept it, and if a convincing election shows popular African support for it, then a good deal of casuistry would be needed before Britain, as the responsible power, could reject it. But the three "ifs" are big ones and they take no account of the power which the Patriotic Front represents. Thus a link between the internal talks and the sort of terms acceptable to the Patriotic Front has to be found. If it can be done at personal level, well and good, although that would require reconciliations which at this late stage would be almost miraculous. If not, it will have to be done institutionally . . . There must be a cease-fire, and before a cease-fire there must be acceptance by the Patriotic Front both of the interim arrangements and of the eventual constitution . . . An internal settlement is beset with conundrums. Does Mr. Smith believe that it would leave effective power in white hands or is he prepared for the wholesale changes . . . which a self-respecting African government would have to bring in . . . ? Just how much residual power is he expecting to entrench behind his blocking mechanism in the assembly?... White Rhodesians are the most isolated community in the "Western" world . . . They can thus be misled into believing that a change of power in Britain or even an upsurge of popular British support for their beleaguered position could somehow influence the course of events in their country . . . The doubts cast on the ourrent British initiative by the [British parliamentary] opposition can dangerously hinder a settlement.

-From the Guardian (London).

British Foreign Minister Owen's ideas for solving the Rhodesian problem-removal of Rhodesian Prime Minister Smith, appointment of a British commissioner and elections under UN supervision-are legalistically logical and bear witness to their author's idealism, but they show little appreciation of realities. Since no one has either the military or the persuasive power to convince those actually in Rhodesia of the plan's advantages, there is little point in insisting rigidly on that particular model. So far Smith has always been able to keep one political jump ahead of Owen, especially in his agreement to negotiate directly with those black leaders actually in the country. There is every reason to believe that Owen, backed by U.S. Ambassador Young, could achieve more in the interests of peace in Rhodesia by participating in the talks now in progress there than by standing back and making moral pronouncements.

WASHINGTON-President Anwar Sadat's visit to Camp David last weekend signals the return of the past: Arabs and Israelis are again at the U.S. court. His grand diplomacy that was to take matters from the superpowers' hands came up against the contradiction between Israel and the Palestinians, and the thorny question of Palestine in inter-Arab politics.

A dual struggle rages for the West Bank and Gaza: The first is between Israel and the Arab states; the second, no less important, is among the Arabs themselves—principally, Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Syria. An outcome in favor of either Jordan or the Palestine Liberation Organization will depend on the play among attempt to determine the shape of inter-Arab politics.

The dynamics of the first and Syria. Whether those counstruggle are more fully understood in the West. But the simultaneous struggle among the Arabs has a deadly reality all its own. The struggle polarizes the Arab world into proponents and opponents of the PLO. In the lexicon of popular discussions, the first are known as "rejectionists," because they oppose compromise with Israel; the latter, now led by President Sadat, are known as 'moderates." But these are mere labels; they convey a half-truth but also obscure deeper, more durable realities

Gave It Away

It is no longer a matter of conjecture to say that President Sadat and King Hussein of Jordan have superseded the Rahat resolution of 1974, which declared the PLO as the "sole and legitimate representative of the Palestinian people." Mr. Sadat gave it away during his visit to Jerusalem. His speech to the Israeli parliament spoke of the rights of the Palestinians but made no reference to the PLO.

According to the prevailing interpretation back then, in November; the reason was his sensi-tivity to the feelings of his hosts, who so adamantly oppose the

But Mr. Sadat is a courageous man; had he wanted to refer to the PLO, he would have had no qualms about doing so. The PLO understood Mr. Sadat's omission: so did that lone member in the Israeli parliament who rose to interrupt Prime Minister Menachem Begin and to ask why no reference was made to the

And when more than one month later President Carter and Zbigniew Brzezinski were still expressing their opposition to an independent Palestinian state, Mr. Sadat must have marveled about their incapacity to catch on: By then the die was cast and Jordan was on its way back into the game as a claimant for the West Bank, and the Rabat resolution had become, at least for Mr. Sadat and King Hussein, a thing of

In an otherwise bleak situation for the PLO at a time when it finds itself cornered by its own rhetoric about its dream of a secular, democratic Palestine; vetoed by Israel; ignored by the United States; abandoned by Mr. Sadat; dominated by Syria—help for the PLO comes from none other than Mr. Begin. something for the Palestinians that would be halfway between Yasser Arafat's call for a secular democratic Palestine and Mr. Be-gin's negation of Palestinian nationalism. But the negotiations have proved far more intractable than he thought. That the man who went to

Jerusalem to bargain for the Arab world as a whole-specifi-cally to give something to Jordan and Syria and to negotiate something over Jerusalem acceptable to Saudi Arabia—has been reduced to a quarrel over minor settlements in Sinai, explains his frustration and impatience. His bet was that Israeli concess would demonstrate the triumph of his brand of politics over the politics of extremism and that crucial Arab states and interests –Saudi Arabia, Syria, Jordan. "moderate" Palestinians—would

Having played his lone card in such a dramatic manner, Mr. Sadat now had to come to Camp David to be reminded by Mr. Carter that patience is a virtue and to be advised that solo performances have run their course

Some Masked Tensions And Unmasked Woes

By Fox Butterfield

HONG KONG.—Radio Peking listeners recently have been surprised to hear newscasters sign off by giving their names. Similarly, the Chinese press agency, Hsinhua, has begun to give bylines to correspondents. Not since the Cultural Revolution have individuals been accorded such recognition in China. The identification of newsmen is one of the many signs of the changes in China since the death of Mso Tse-tung 16 months ago. The changes have been in both style and substance. In place of Mao's emphasis on constant class struggle, the new tone seems to be one of somber realism, a recognition of the difficulties China must overcome if it is to mee the goal of "comprehensive modernization" by the year 2000.

The tone is epitomized, perhaps, by the call of Deputy Premier Teng Hslao-ping for "less empty telk and more hard work." Mr. Teng, purged twice under Mao for stressing pragmatism over ideology, concluded a visit, to Burma last week, then set off for Nepal. The overseas travels were the first by a senior member of the Chinese hierarchy since 1975, when Mr. Teng. briefly back in power, journeyed to France, and it was another sign that he, and his views, are

Moved Rapidly

Mao's successors have moved rapidly to dismantle some of the Cultural Revolution's populist reforms in education, industry, science and technology. Expertise, quality and discipline are back in fashion, with less worry about the dangers of creating a new elite. But because Mao is still venerated in China and the new leaders need his imprimatur to back up their own legitimacy, these changes have not been proclaimed openly. Instead they have been disguised as continuity, a further advance along Mao's true path, or a return to the es of the early 1950s before the factional quarrels of the Great Leap Forward and the

Whether the new policies, however they are presented, will be able to correct China's difficulties is unclear. An elderly and failing Mao left behind a stalled economy, melficient factories, universities that didn't teach, a Communist party apparatus torn by bitterness and an authority crisis and a lost generation of embittered Chinese youth, thrown out of school by the Cultural Revolution and packed off to the countryside.
. Probably the most direct repudiation of Mao has been in education and science, where China's new authorities acknowledge that the late chairman's radical experiments cost the country a generation of talent. In the last few months, Peking has reinstituted college entrance school students may go directly to university without having to first spend two years working in the villages and told acceptists that they may spend most of their time in their laboratories instead of in manual labor. Two weeks ago, the government announced that it was re-establishing the special schools for bright students abolished in 1966. Although these reforms may tend to foster inequality, they appear to be widely popular among a people who have long valued editication.

In China's factories, where recent; foreign visitors have been surprised to see large numbers of idle machines and a high rate of worker absenteeism, managers authority over workers has been ordered restored. To rekindle the workers' enthusiasm, Peking has also granted the first wage raises in nearly 20 years, with the promise of more material incentives to follow. Preliminary statistics for 1977 suggest that the new policies may be more effective than the old. Industrial output last year rose 14 per cent after two years of near-stagnation. Chinese agriculture has also experienced three consecutive bad years, largely because of bad weather, with the result that food production has failed to keen pace with population growth. (China's population may now be as high as 950 million.) To help overcome the shortfall, Peking has been promoting an ambitious program to mechanize Chinese agriculture by 1980. The program will require the introduction of everything from tractors and rural electrification to chemical fertilizers.

While China's leaders are apparently in broad agreement on these new policies, they still seem riven by personal grudges another inheritance from Mao's last years. A nationwide purge of followers of the so-called Gang of Four, begun with the arrest of Mao's widow, Chiang Ching, in October, 1976, is apparently still far from over. Last week, a provincial radio station announced that the party leader of China's Sinklang region had been removed from office and replaced by his deputy. In this housecleaning, the oldline bureaucrats and army veter-ans who were humiliated in the Cultural Revolution have been systematically ousting the generally younger officials who drove them from public life 10 years ago. In one case, in Szechwan province, a middle-aged couple who rose to power in the Cuitural Revolution by identifying with Miss Chiang and Chairman Mao, have been dragged from one "mass struggle ses another over recent months.

In Peking itself, there seems to be a certain masked tension between the followers of Mr. Teng, who was purged under the Cultural Revolution, and those ? associated with Hua Kuo-feng, 🖘 Mao's successor as party chair-man, whose career advanced during the political upheaval. Apparently to assert his authority. the rather bland Mr. Hus. has been adopting some of Mao's well-known characteristics -- exchanging his crewcut for Mao's swept back hairdo and issuing samples of his calligraphy for use on newspaper masthesds and railroad stations. But to judge by recent key appointments and policy decisions, Mr. Teng, a feisty man who always seems to be in a hurry, may be winning the race with Mr. Hus.

Stern exhortations of "Woman's

In this century it was Dorothy Thompson who wrote articles for 60 years, successfully urging millions of females to stay home and fulfill their biological destiny, creating a haven of love and stability from which male world-shapers would sally forth into the Brave New World. This utopian vision of a home-based matriarchy has contributed to the amorality of technology. A feminist worthy of the name is one who insists that men as well as housewives-scientists. architects, executives, union leaders, politicians take on equal responsibility for the quality of human relations (which naturally includes regarding females as hu-

In Namibia, S. Africa Dismantles White Rule as Independence Nears

By John F. Burns

WINDHOEK, South-West Africa, Feb. 6 (NYT) .- Nearly a cenafter Bismarck claimed this semidesert territory for imperial Germany, the machinery of white domination is being dismantled rapidly in preparation for the birth of a yast, mineral-rich African nation to be called Namibia.

The process, begun two years ago, has been hastened in recent months by South Africa, which has governed the territory under 2 League of Nations mandate since 1920. After defying the United Nations for three decades, the South African government has reversed its policy and agreed to independence under majority ru'e next year.

The shape that independence will take could be settled next month. The Western powers will make a last-ditch attempt through the UN to forge an agreement be-tween South Africa and the South-West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO), the Sovietbacked nationalist group that has tied down 20,000 South African troops in a decade-old guerrilla

But the Pretoria government, hoping that a coalition of whites and moderate blacks called the Democratic Turnballe Alliance will defeat SWAPO in an election, is not waiting for the outcome of the UN talks. At a pace that has surprised and confused many of the territory's 850,000 inhabitants, it has set about dismantling its once sacrosanct system of white

South Africa's agent is a 57-/ear-old Afrikaner judge, Marthi-nus Steyn, who became administrator of the territory in Septem-

The official began unraveling the system of apartheid, or racial separation, by repealing laws forhidding marriage and sexual relations between whites and people of other races. Next to be overturned were the Pass Laws, which forbade blacks to move outside their rural "homelands" without permits. Measures curbing free speech and assembly were next to be removed.

New decrees are issued almost daily. Judge Stayn has scoured lawbooks going back to German colonial days, rooting out discriminatory measures, but not all statutory barriers to equality will be removed. The judge has deed his task as removing the most glaring inequities and clear-ing the ground for the elections that South Africa has accepted in its negotiations with the Western powers, not "remaking from top to bottom."

Growing Acceptance

Many whites seem to have taken the changes in stride. Since 1975, when the old territorial administration began desegregating pub-lic parks and buildings, racial mixing has won growing acceptance. Judging by casual conversations around the city, the bastening of the process by Judge Steyn has done little to stir new

"But I don't think we really want them living next door."

The differing viewpoints were reflected in the schism that split the National party last year. When South Africa agreed to SWAPO's participation in a preindependence election, the party's liberal wing, led by Dirk Mudge, the Republican party, and joined black and mixed-race leaders in the Turnhalle Alliance. White Veto Power

The alliance will contest the vote on the basis of the charter drawn up at the Turnhalle, an old German drill hall here in Windhoek Led by the whites, representatives of the territory's 11 ethnic groups agreed on an independence constitution that would divide power on racial lines, with whites retaining a veto on reforms affecting their privileged social and economic position. The Mudge group, sensitive to the popular support for SWAPO and its demand for a nonracial constitution, agreed to the Turnhalle draft's being changed in a way that would speed integration and limit the blocking power of whites. But conservatives in the National party, wedded to the original, rejected any changes.

Since the split, the conservatives have formed their own election alignment, the Action Group for the Maintenance of Turnhalle Principles. According to a South African journalist who follows the group's activities closely, its organizers in rural areas have been telling farmers that Judge Steyn's reforms will be repealed by the constituent assembly that will emerge from the elections. "There'll be snow in the Name Desert before that happens, of course," the journalist said. "But the fact that they're out there

Purchasers Say Prices Rise Sharply

NEW YORK, Feb. 6 (AP-DJ). -Inflationary pressures accelersied during January, a survey of corporate purchasing managers

The rate of price increases for materials used by manufacturers "spurted" last month, according to the latest monthly survey by the National Association of Purchacing Management Inc. That rate has in two months recovered over half of the drop which occurred in the March-November period of 1977," the survey said. Parlier concern about 1978 price pressures "is showing definite signs of validity."

Of the buying agents surveyed in January, 48 per cent reported paying higher prices, compared with 37 per cent in December and 25 per cent in November. Only 1 per cent reported lower prices in January, compared with per cent in December and I per cent in November.

Nevertheless, the survey said members' comments "frequently point out the continuance of competitive conditions, with good buys still available in most

The survey also showed more companies reporting lower pay-rolls last month. "Employment is one of the not-so-bright spots" in the January report, the associstion said. Those reporting lower payrolls increased to 13 per cent from 7 per cent in December, while those reporting no change fell to 70 per cent from 76 per cent. Mr. Post said Euroclear is also heavily involved in trying to get the clearing of South African gold mining shares off the ground.

This should get started in the next couple of months, he added. Furthermore, Euroclear has been clearing Singapore Asian dollar certificates of deposit since

After Good Performance in 1977

A Bearish Outlook for U.K. Stocks

By Alan Jenks

LONDON, Feb. 6 (AP-DJ),-The London stock market, one of the world's best performers last year, has begun 1978 poorly and many analysts are becoming increasingly pessimistic about the outlook for this year. In 1977 the Financial Times index of 30 industrial shares surged 36.8 per cept. However, the rally anticipated for the start of this year failed to materialize, and prices of both stocks and government bonds are now at their lowest levels

The Financial Times industrial index closed Friday at 458.7, down 5.4 per cent from 485.4 at the start of January and down 15.5 per cent from the all time high of 549,2 set in mid-September of last year.

In its investment comment released over the weekend, stockbrokers Hedderwick Stirling Grum-bar & Co. predicted that the industrial 'ndex "is heading steeply downward." Fielding Newsom-Smith & Co. has warned clients that "the bull market is now over." The stockbroking firm is advising investors in government bonds to build up liquidity until longterm bonds yield 12.5 to 13 per cent, compared with present levels of 11 to 11.5 per cent.

Chartists at Hedderwick Stirling and elsewhere were upset by the failure last week of the industrial index to hold above the 470-support crea, and some are now predicting that the market will not bottom out until the index gets - lose to the 400 level.

The main reasons given for the weakness of the market are the growing militancy of workers demanding pay rises exceeding the government's inflation control guidelines, fears that the -overnment budget for the year beginning April 1 will be excessively expansive and the drop in export earnings caused by the pound's strength on the foreign exchange market.

Last week leaders of two of the most powerful unions—the miners and the power supply workers—rejected wage offers tied to guidelines calling for pay increases to be limited to 10 per cent or less a year. A gasoline supply shortage is developing due to a work-to-rule by tanker truck drivers seeking large pay boosts.

There is also mounting pressure against grv-ernment sanctions aimed at making companies keep within the "unofficial" 10-per-cent celling will call in a House of Commons debate tomor-row for Prime Minister James Callaghan to disclose the names of 19 firms allegedly "blacklisted" from receiving official grants or contracts because of the wage increases they have made. Some of the "blacklisted" companies are considering court actions to have the sanctions

The growing union discontent with pay controls has worried many foreign investors in British bonds who, dealers report, are now taking the profits they made last year. British institutional investors, however, seem to be more worried that the government, looking ahead to a vossible election later this year, will opt for an overly expansive "vote-getting" 1977-78 budget.

In their latest monthly economic forecasts, Philipps & Drew said that a net budget stimulus to the economy of £2.5 billion-which many economists believe quite likely—could lead to money supply growth accelerating to 15 per cent in the fiscal year beginning this April.

Commenting on the budget message expected within the next two months, stockbroker De Zoete & Bevan warns of the "high risk that economic activity will be stimulated too sharply too soon, with resulting pressures on monetary control, the balance of payments and consequently sterling."

The third main factor contributing to the bearish London Stock Exchange outlook is the squeeze on export earnings caused by the pound's strength against other currencies. The confederation of British Industry, releasing the findings of its quarterly industrial trends survey last week, said "pessimism about the outlook for exports is as widespread now as was the optimism of 12 months ago."

Over 60 per cent of the exporters covered in the survey said the relatively high price of sterling compared with other currencies was likely to limit orders from overseas in the next few months. Phillips & Drew believes earnings of industrial companies grew only 5 per cent in the second half of 1977, compared with a first half advance of 20 per cent, "The recent strength of sterling will have harmed export profits in the final quarter of 1977 and also depressed overseas profits in sterling terms," the stockbroking firm says.

BRUSSELS, Feb. 6 (IHT).-International bankers express confidence that the syndicated Eurocurrency bank credit market is now moving in favor of lend-,

For much of the past year, borrowers from all over the world have been able to obtain sizable sums for long periods on decreasing interest-rate margins. But this trend may be about to reverse itself, the bankers ciaim. Encouragement is being derived from the relative failure of the $1.2-billion credit for Venezuela which was signed last week.

The loan has a final maturity of years and pays a spread of 3/4 per cent throughout. For some bankers, this was too long

According to reliable sources, the managers of the Venezuelan loan hoped to syndicate around

Bankers claim the lackluster response to Venezuela indicates that banks no longer are willing to participate in long-maturity. low-spread deals. One American banker comments: "Lenders looking for a realistic able to phisin margins of 5/8 per cent. But despite fears to the contrary, the 1/2-per-cent barrier has not yet been breached and probably will not be in the present cycle, bankers suggest.

West German banks have been regarded as the most aggressive lenders in the past 12 months and have been willing to slash margins and extend maturities to win business. This policy has paid handsome dividends and the major German banks are now among the leaders in the management tables for syndicated loans.

But some German banks appear to be revising their attitude. Walter Seipp, deputy chairman of Westdeutsche Landesbank Girozentrale, says: We are not willing to do business at any price. In view of our well bal-anced, highly profitable international loan portfolio, we can sit back and wait if we do not like a deal." U.S. banks are also putting up resistance to low-spread deals. Citibank, which is the leading manager of Eurocredits, has a firm policy of not lending at less than 3/4 per cent. In view of the bank's decline in earnings last year, some bankers speculate that Citibank may raise this minimum in the near future to 7/8 or even 1 per cent. However, a question mark remains about the attitude of the Japanese banks which were allowed to resume syndicated lending last summer. Western bankers maintain that the Japanese

Auto Sales Fall in U.S.

DETROIT, Feb. 6 (AP) .-Domestic auto sales, a key indicator of U.S. economic health, contipued their downward slide in late January, with major domestic carmakers posting a 7.1-per-cent sales decilne. The slump, blamed on crippling

Take a look at the new Allis-Chalmers.

*Earnings per Share Up 22% in 1977. 6th Consecutive Year of Earnings Growth.

*Estimated earnings at record level of $5.50 per share

For the sixth consecutive year, Allis-Chalmers has shown substantial growth in its earnings per share. Estimated earnings of $5.50 represent a 22% increase over 1976.

Special machinery groups are major contributors

Overall 1977 profit achievement can be attributed to highly diversified technological product businesses worldwide.

For example, fluid and solid processing equipment were particularly strong, and good performances were also achieved in the electrical, material handling and outdoor power equipment sectors of the company.

The 1977 records were achieved in the face of a 45% decline in agricultural equipment profits, which are now expected to represent only about one-fourth of total earnings.

Process equipment acquisition to help growth

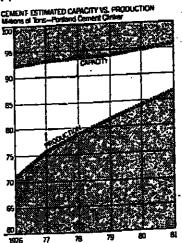

Another reason why the process equipment sector should maintain its confirmed growth is the acquisition of Sala International AB in late 1977. Sala provides a wide range of hydro-metallurgical equipment, expanding the already broad line of products and processes offered to the water and waste water treatment industries as well as the minerals processing industry.

The world needs more of what Allis-Chalmers

Let us clarify. IEO means International Executive Opportunities, and that's a special section which appears in the International Herald Tribune. Less eloquent newspapers speak of recruitment ads.

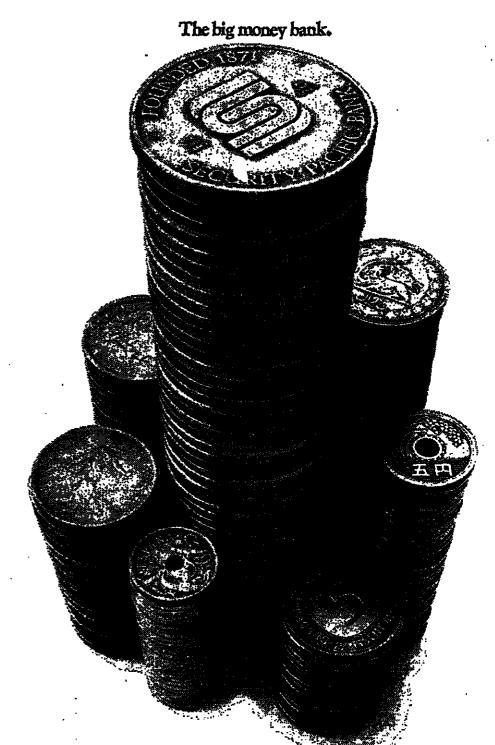

In the Herald Tribune, Europe's only international daily and the one read most by most multi-national executives, the level of positions offered is higher than that of other newspapers; interest and response are higher, too.

So if you're an executive looking for a better job, you're more likely to find it in the Herald Tribune.

If, on the other hand, you're a company seeking a qualified international executive, you're likely to be successful with an ad in the Herald Tribune IEO section. Because...

BLACK NIGHT, WHITE SNOW

Russia's Revolutions, 1905-1917

By Harrison E. Salisbury. Doubleday. 746 pp. $149.

Reviewed by John Leonard

Snow" isn't history written by flashes of lightning, it seems at least to have been typed on a drum. It pounds along. It is al-most drunk on Russia. It keeps company with Alexander Blok. who understood 1917 to consist of night and snow, the hungry dog, the bloody flag, bullets, roses and Jesus.

Above it flies the sliver dove of Andre Bely, who in 1908 in-formed us: "In the West there are many books; in Russia there are many unspoken words. There is that in Russia which destroys books and smashes buildings and puts life itself to the fire; and on that day when the West comes to Russia it will be totally consumed by fire; all will burn that can be burned because only from the ashes of death does the zhar-ptitsa, the firebird, fly to heaven."

By now. Harrison Salisbury, Pulitzer Prize-winning former reporter and editor of The New York Times, should need no introduction. He spent years in Russia, Two indifferent novels of his are set there. More to the point, he is the author of the splendid "The 900 Days: The Siege of Leningrad."

compete with John Reed and Trotsky, with the seven volumes of Nikolai Sukhanov's memoirs and the last 127 pages of Edmund Wilson's "To the Finland Station." But he had to do it. And he has done it excitingly well. His style doesn't help much. It is slapdash and rather like a courtesan, willing when the rubles are right to accommodate any cliché off the streets.

Salisbury writes and files as if on deadline, on bandages or "with the stub of a pencil on squared sheets from a child's notebook," as Lenin did in drafting his proposal for the October coup. There isn't time for nice-ties; let editors or historians fix this up, and prettily.

And yet be triumphs because he is the consummate reporter seized by passion. What a story he's got hold of! He interviews everybody, even the dead, in their letters and diaries and apologetics. He haunts that small portion of the meticulous Soviet archives that he is permitted to consult, he swallows all the books, and needs to spit.

But he brings back the quotes and what quotes they are—from Mayakovsky and Trotsky, from Gorky and Rasputin Zinaida Gippins and V. V. Shul-

The imagination of "Black Night, White Snow" is dominated by pairs. One pair is Lenin and Nicholas. Salisbury holds them in almost contempt: "How terrible it is to have an autocracy without an autocrat," said Shulgin-superstitious, insensitive and incompetent: and Lenin power-hungry "Jesuit of Socialism," railroading the Soviet, stealing the social revolu-tionary program, abolishing free-dom of the press and the Con-stituent Assembly, creating the cheka and murdering Romanovs. Kerensky wasn't interesting.

He talked a good losing game But a Soviet of more than one Bolshevik voice, and a Constituent Assembly associated with the democratic impulse, were the hope of Russia. Rasputin wasn't the only firebird available to Bely. Gorky could have told him.

The second pair is comprised of the artists of the "silver age and those "dark people." To dark people—what Irving How calls "the appearance of millior. of speechless men, climbing up from the silence of centuries"flexed.

The artists, the poets and the novelists, felt a climbing on their spine, and shivered, before 190.

and before 1917. Who knows why? Maybe Rusrian literature got started sc. late that it stayed close to sociale truth. Maybe the poets spent so much time sandpapering their raw nerve-ends that they fel: Maybe Russian swaddling after all, is decisive.

But imagine: The dark people are still with us, inchoate. The artists were subsidized by the new bourgeois rich to whom-Nicholas wouldn't listen. And I.,. if Lenin had allowed me to vote in either the Soviet of the Constituent Assembly, would have supported the Menshevik Julius Martov—which is like voting for Turgeney, "The Superfluous Man," a Hamlet or a scruple.

He may be putting pressure on the opponents in a gambling effort, forcing them to run or risk a heavy penalty. Alternatively, the double may be an attempt to help partner find the winning opening lead. In these rare situations, it is vital to know what lead the doubler is asking for, and there are certain wellestablished rules.

If the doubling side has bid

no suit has been bid naturally. Now partnership agreement comes into play. Many pairs use the double to indicate a strong major suit, leaving partner to guess which he will usually lead his shorter major. In such austions, such as one

this year by the International Automobile Federation. 'All The Credit'

"I helped out for just a fraction over an hour," he said, "but Rolf and Tony should get all the credit. I decided to stay with the other car when they were both running on the same lap well into the morning. I didn't take a turn in their car until they had it 20 laps ahead."

Did that mean he should still be considered a three-time win-ning driver, as is his former teammate and rival from Jacksonville. Haywood?

"Well, I did drive a little bit," said Gregg hastly, almost hun-grily. "Maybe they'll give me the credit for the fourth win."

Many will accuse Gregg of shameless gamesmanship, there is no question that his team was superbly organized and skillful, as impressively crafted as the vehicles they fielded.

"There is no difference between him and a factory team," lauded Stommelen, a top grand priz driver from 1970 through 1974 when he had a bad crash at Barcelona. He now normally drives with Hezemans for Germany's Georg Loos team.

The Stommelen-Hesemans can averaged 108.743 m.p.b. for the race and finished 115.2 miles, or 30 laps, shead of the Rutherford-Schurti-Barbour entry. Thirtytwo cars finished the race, of 67 that started Saturday at 4:33

NBA Stars Show Off, East Wins

By Paul Attner

ATLANTA, Feb. 6 (WP) .-Randy Smith, the contest's most valuable player, put yesterday's 28th NBA All-Star Game into perspective.

"We didn't have any plays, but baskethall is a basic game," the Buffalo guard said. "You pick andr oll, you play defense, you shoot and you run. I think it made for a good show for the

The 22 all-sters showed how basic basketball also can be sensational basketball. The East just happened to play a little more spectacularly in defeating the West, 133-125. Although the sell out crowd in the Omn! was delighted that its team won—the Atlanta Hawks are in the Eastern Conference—the real pleasure of the contest came from watching the amazing talents of the players.

The game had a little of everything, from one of those floating, one-handed dunks by Philadelphia's Julius Erving to a gravitydefying, spinning reverse layup by New York's Bob McAdoo to two at-the buzzer, 40-foot jumpers by

'A Showcase'

"I think this gave everyone a nice view of what professional basketball it all about," said East center Dave Cowens of Boston. "It was a showcase of what this game is.

"Rvervone talks about the fact we get paid so much. But we all played a lot of basketball before we got paid for it. You definitely want of show you can play the game on an individual basis when you come here. You use streetball fundamentals to show it." It was almost as if the players were involved in some kind of tag-team match. First one player would take over the show, then another would grab the spotlight. The West's Paul Westphal, from Phoenix, got things going with a 16-point four-assist one-steal first half when his team dominated with its running game and the inside defense of Portland's

Bill Walton. The only reason the East was just nine points back at intermission was the play of Doug Collins, the 76er guard who was trying to fulfill the role of playmaker. He shot enough to have 12 points and had three assists. offsetting Erving's one-for-10 mis-

The fans oohed and sahed when Erving blocked a dunk attempt by Denver's David Thompson and Portland's Maurice Lucas smashed home a dunk so hard the ball board. But the best was yet to

It was not until the final quarter that Smith and the other East palyers began exerting themselves. San Antonio's Larry Kenon made two quick baskets to narrow a 12-point deficit to cight, then Smith took over.

He received a long pass from Cowens, who had been plagued early fouls, and swished en 18-footer from the key. Another Cowens pass led to a Smith fastbreak layup. After three West points, Smith countered with a medium-range jumper, a 20-footer, a layup off yet another Cowens pass, and finally, a 12-fcot jump

That pulled the East to 113-112 and it was time for the Doctor. His three-point play gave the East its first lead since the cpening minutes and his three foul shots moments later after baskets by Smith and Cowens, expanded the margin to 10 points.

15 Straight Points

West ccach Jack Ramsay called a timeout but the West was finished. The East had ripped off 15 straight points during a 23-2 burst, in which Smith had pro-duced 12 points.

Smith finished with 27 points and six assists while demonstrating why he is considered the fastest guard in a longue of fast backcourt players.

"My jeb was to run and fill the middle." said Smith a seventh-round draft choice in 1971 who high jumped 6-10 3/4, triple jumped 52 feet and was an All-

America soccer player at Buffalo

"When I came in, I wanted to use my speed and penetrate and create offensive situations." That is just what he did. He more than made up for the East's lack of playmaking guards, although he had plenty of help rebounds, 12 points and Erving's commanding presence at the end. Smith said he even practices his last-second, long jumpers. "I take them all the time in Buffalo," he said, "They usually don't go in, but I practice them

Boston's John Havlicek, playing in a record-tying 13th All-Star Clame, started for the East after Collins stepped aside "because I thought John should start. It was an honor for me to let him start." Havlicek, who got a long ovation when he was introduced, scored 10 points.

Although more violent than most attitudes toward McKee, these comments are typical of the feeling that he is getting something for nothing. The coach of another skiing team here termed it "unfortu-nate" that McKee was able to compete, although the coach admitted that no rules were being broken. "We don't really care," he said, "whether he races or not, but it's sort of sad, isn't it, to see somebody his age still chasing that dream. Still another team's coach came back to the supposed free ride McKee is getting. "He's got a right to race in the World Cup and World Championships," the coach said.

other personal details, including the fact that he attended Cornell University, playing hockey there from 1959 through 1961, he said, and working in the hotel business before he went into real estate. He added that he "worked like a dog" last year to make the extra $5,000 or $6,000 he estimates the World Cup tour will cost him, mainly for his rented car and his equipment, of which only the skis are supplied free by a sponsor.

"In the beginning," he said of the tour, I was embarrassed, but not now. Personally I feel I've earned my place. I'm a little disappointed that I'm not doing well, but I just haven't been able to get the practice necessary.

"There hasn't been enough snow in Europe for me to get in any free skiing. You cannot go in a slalom without practicing the slalom, and I'm not able to do that. In training, you make one run, two runs and that's it. "I always start near the end.

As a one-man team, assisted since Christmas by his wife, McKee noted how much of his time is spent handling the details that other skiers leave to their entourages. "On a big team," he said, "all you have to do is get up and show up" at a race. "Everything else is done for you. "Me, I've got to do it all for

While talking, McKee does not complain, he explains. There is never a sign that he feels sorry

> "Do I ever feel self-pity?" he asked, repeating a question. "No, I don't, ever, because this is You can get up feeling good every day for two weeks, but there's no snow and no racing, and then it snows like crazy but you get up that morning with a race scheduled and your tooth hurts and your stomach's upset and you do terribly. But that's what it's all about."

Among his biggest problems are hotel accommodations, which are supplied by the host town or village on the World Cup

"They always give the better teams the better accommodations," he said. "Sometimes they even lose my application form because. I guess, it's for just one skier. I wasted half a day here in Gasmisch because my hotel had given me a room without toilet or shower. Can you imagine it? Tweive days without toilet or shower of your own.

McKee plans to continue with the World Cup tour after the World Championships, then go to Italy for the national cham-pionships. "The Italian skiers like me," he said. "They're not cold like some of the Austrians and some others." Then he will return to the United States this month with the rest of the World Cup competitors before going West to enter the U.S. spring series and veterans com-

He said that he planned to do a lot of skiing in Vermont to polish his technique, but admitted that he also honed to relax. "I haven't seen a couch in Europe. They don't seem to have them where I stay. I want to go home for a while and just put my feet up." Would he race in the World

French Women Have Vote—Now Want Votes

By Jane M. Friedman

PARIS, Feb. 6 (IHI).—The French women's movement drew a bit closer to its U.S. counterpart today when it announced it would present a women's slate with 50 candidates and 50 alternates running on a party platform in the French legislative elections next month. It was the first time in France that women had formed a political party, elaborated a feminist platform and recruited women candidates. Until now the French movement has been preoccupied with rape, abortion and contraception reform. The U.S. movement has been trying to elect women to office but it has never formed a women's party

Gisèle Halimi, lawyer and copresident of Choisir, the most well-known French women's group, with 10,000 members, announced the move at a press conference. "This is an event in the women's struggle," she said to a group of activists and journalists. "It is the first time a group of women have decided to defend a platform in an election campaign."

Choisir first became known in France in 1972, when it took on the struggle for a liberalized abortion law. Gisèle Halimi was instrumental in getting the new law when in that year she defended 16 - year old Marie-Claire Chevaller, who was prosecuted in Bobigny, a Paris suburb. for having had an illegal

It is unlikely that any of the major parties will withdraw their candidates to favor candidates of Choisir. A Socialist party official, speaking unoffi-cially, defended his party's policy. Despite the slim prospects, the 30 women candidates on the podium seemed confident. All together, the 100 Choisir candidates and alternates have 189 children. They include five housewives, six physicians, five teachers, a stewarders and Air France's only woman pilot.

The feeling at this meeting was that the French women's movement had taken a new turn. "It's utopic" said Maryse Wolinski, a feminist. "The districts the women are running in are too big. But it's truly historic."

Miss Halimi refused to sav whether she was influenced by the women's movement in the United States. She has met with feminist leaders there on several occasions. However. Claude Perpere, running for a Choisir seat in Marseilles, said she was sure the American movement had been influential.

Miss Halimi said: "No French party has given women a voice. We don't want to be voters anymore. We want to be elected."
